Rendu's Insight

Since coming back from the Philippines, I've just been in this state of amazement at what the Lord has done. We'd been preparing for months. So many people sacrificed time, money, effort, and went through spiritual warfare, all believing that God would show up. And He did!

Even though we already believed He would, to actually see it and be a part of it was still so amazing. I just keep thinking, all of this has been so worth it. He is so worth it.

The more testimonies we hear, and the more I start to understand the impact of what happened in the lives of those who attended, the more my heart fills with gratefulness. It stirs something in me to keep going.

And even more than that, I feel like the Lord is letting me see His heart for His Bride in a deeper way and I'm learning to trust His leadership, to trust the way He's leading her to become who He's called her to be.

At the conference, our team's heart was simple: to move with the Spirit. If that meant changing everything we planned, then we'd do it. And what the Lord's been showing me is that this mindset isn't meant to stay at a conference or in ministry moments, this has to be the standard of my life.

Every morning when I wake up, I need to remember that He's not stagnant. He's always speaking. He's always moving. And I want my heart to stay tender, willing, and ready to obey whatever He says.

I don't want to live casual or passive. I don't want to live religious and repetitive. I want to live intentional and present in each moment with ears to hear and a heart ready to move even if it means changing my plans. I want to stay deeply connected to His heart.

He's so worth it!

Prayer: In all things let us heed the invitation to come up higher!
